SUBJECT:

I was disturbed to see the apparent greed for Questar gas. To raise the price of natural gas at a pumping station for cars because it can get the price since gasoline is a higher price. Their costs did not go up its just greed. It would seem to me that if they can charge that price and get away with it, then where is my incentive to buy a more enviromentaly friendly car. Maybe they should start paying the tax rate that gasoline has to pay.

If I am incorrect in any of my assumptions please let me know. I don't always get all the facts but would love to have balanced information

Thanks
Steve Bell
