To whom it may concern,
 I am a small business owner. I changed over from regular gas engine vehicles in 2007 for the purpose of saving money and contributing in my small way to "saving the planet". Although I had to wait in line most times because there aren't many stations yet and I couldn't travel out of this state because I would have to have a huge tank to get to other states with stations to fuel at, I was ok with the difficulty in obtaining fuel because the benefit outweighed the cost. If you let these changes take effect than I will have to take a huge loss on the value of my vehicle and the cost to benefit ratio will swing greatly to the negative. I believe that I am not the only one that will have to switch back to the fossil fuels and we as a state will no longer be a leader in the alternitave fuel race. I have heard Utah mentioned several times on national radio and publications because of our willingness to use natural gas. Being that we get our natural gas locally it makes no sense to tie ourselves to the national market. I would have no problem paying a modest fee at the pump though for infrastructure.
 Thank you for you time,
 Lilo llc President,
 Aaron Swank
