Subject: possible Public Service Commission rule change

I am concerned that the Division of Public Utilities and the Committee of Consumer Services aren't representing consumers' interests effectively. It is my understanding that the Public Service Commission is considering a rule change that could make it very difficult for individual ratepayers or groups with limited resources to be heard. I would hope that the Commission would want to make it more possible, not less so, for ratepayers and groups to participate in the process of utility regulation and any rules changes would reflect that goal. If the Commission should decide that each participating individual or group has to be represented by an attorney, the cost of the attorney should be paid by the Commission or the utility. Thank you for considering my opinion.
